Players May Write for Newspapers

New York, October 4.—Chairman August Herrmann, of the national commission, declared to-day that any player eligible for the world's series, which starts here next Tuesday, who had made a contract with newspapers or periodicals to furnish stories of the games, would be allowed to do so. The commission's ruling against this procedure, said Mr. Herrmann, should be interpreted with common sense.

"Last week at a meeting of the Managing Editors' Association in Cincinnati I appeared before them and explained the commission's attitude regarding this matter," said the baseball magnate. "They all agreed that the stand of the untional commission was a just one, and assured me that, after this year, no player in the contending clubs—in fact, no player at ril—would be hired by them to write world's series stories."

While The Times-Dispatch Marathon was in full sway, while the Blues' football team downed the Invincibles; while the old Battle Axes defeated the new, Benedictine College made its initial appearance on the field for griditon honors, and wen from the Scholastics 12 to 0.

Pollard, Amos, Parsons, Morrison and Fletcher gained the winning turf for the soldier boys, while the whole team performed spiendidly and worked as a machine. Only one miscue occurred, and on this occasion Amos received the ball, expecting to pass it to Parsons. A mixup followed, and Amos showed headwork and ability by taking the ball himself and scoring a clean touchdown from the forty-five yard line.

Parsons scored his tally with two Scholastic warriors swinging to his neck.
